Tuesday

- Echo read
- Theodore "Teddy" Roosevelt (1858-1919), was responsible for putting a name to the teddy bear phenomenon after a newspaper cartoon pictured him repusing to shoot an injured bear on a hunting trip. ("Teddy's bear" became a buzz phrase.) Despite giving his blessing for stuffed-animal makers to describe their bears as "Teddys," Roosevelt—whose childhood nickname was "Teedie" or "Teddy" —was no fan of the nickname! He liked being called "Colonel Roosevelt" in his later years. While on safari, his African escorts called him "Bwana Tumbo," or "Mr. Unusually Large Belly."
- HE PRACTICALLY KEPT A ZOO WHILE HE WAS PRESIDENT
- Roosevell's White House was no place for anyone skittish over animals. In addition to the numerous dogs, rabbits, and horses, the president also kept snakes, flying squirrels, chickens, bears, a lion, a zebra, and what he described as a "friendly and affectionate" rat.

Book Talk

What evidence is there that there in the text to tell you if Roosevelt was an animal lover or not ?